

The Emperor's Quite New Clothes

We should now be dealing with the New World Order, to which we for some time (and many still) have turned a blind eye. Having detected most of the aspects of 9/11 half a year later – thus in the spring of 2002, – I thought it could just be a matter of a brief period before the world (at least the free part of it outside North America) also understood. Then came 2003 the Iraq war, in which Denmark (my native country) courageously participated; in February 2004, there was a whistleblower who showed that the government had knowledge of the Bush-Blair lie about WMDs (currently repeated towards Iran). The court denied to see the o-so-secret documents and sentenced the whistleblower to prison while the real culprits remained in honour; in May 2005, a similar case, the Downing Street Minutes, was disclosed in Iraq but did not prevent Tony Blair's re-election later that month; in July that year followed the terror-attack on the Underground and a bus (7/7), in which you could recognize many logical inconsistencies, and so on. And always could you notice the same reaction by the majority which rejected my objections as paranoia. However, as most paranoiacs, I showed no accept of this diagnosis; instead, I collected the evidence, elaborated various essays and – after having removed the pictures – even transferred most of these essays to my homepage ( <http://www.schou.de/terrorwar/index.html> ), still hoping that I, as in the famous story "The Emperor's New Clothes" by H. C. Andersen like the small boy could disclose the Emperor's nakedness.

As 9/11 approaches its tenth 'anniversary,' we can all agree that it remains an outstanding occurrence which, whatever its background, changed the course of history. Exactly this history did I reconsider now as a paranoiac and found shocking revision. But 9/11 is an affair which was particularly easy to disclose – for people whose perception was not blocked by unjustified respect towards the authorities: the lacking plane at Pentagon (search for Thierry Meyssan's funny 'Hunt the Boeing' on the Net); the hole in the ground by Shankesville, where the fourth plane should have landed; the Twin Towers in New York, an unacknowledged world record for dismantling of skyscrapers is concerned, both what height and number of people still present in the building by the demolition is concerned; and then the third tower, did you forget? The demolition is obvious for laymen in four videos on the net. The Danish scientist Niels Harrit led an International investigation which demonstrated explosives in its dust.

Of course it would be wrong to consider all those good citizens as idiots for not informing themselves, simply because they are in majority. Different with the journalists who ought to keep us informed about what is happening in the world and therefore cannot be expected to close their eyes for, what they perhaps did not want to see. I do, in fact, feel pity for the younger members of the press who, if they want to keep their job, are forced to betray their moral obligations and instead disperse censored stories. But somewhere up in the hierarchy you find the responsible editors – may they soon be reminded of their responsibility.

How could an old bourgeois like me suddenly merge so wide to the left in the political spectre? Actually, I do not think that I have changed my moral basis. It was the others, who in goose-step (ge.: Steckmarch) marched to the right and in a short time has stopped all the social progress that we towards the end of the 20th Century managed to experience – the fruits of earlier generations work. The society has become harsh for the weak and hostile towards foreigner – worldwide.

Back to the Emperor. "He has no clothes on," cries a small boy. "Tsch!" demands his mother, neither has she, and also the soldiers and bureaucrats joining the promenade and the majority of the audience are (un)dressed the same way, apart for the obligate tie for the men. "Conspiracy theoretics" is the contemptuous designation for the few critics of the smart tailors (the conspiracy practitioners). As in the original story, there is no risk for them ever to get punished.
